

You hear the word “hybrid”	Someone in your child’s class asks, “How do I change my emoji?”	Someone in your child’s class posts something inappropriate in the group chat	You hear the phrase “Learning pod”	You get an email from your child’s school about how they are “really, really excited about the school year”
You fill out a survey from your child’s school	Your child asks you to help them with a math assignment and it is over your head	Your child accidentally interrupts a work call	Your child interrupts a work call on purpose	You call your parents and ask if they can babysit for a week (or more)
You run outside and scream a nonsense word in anguish	You consider sending your child off to join the circus	You start drinking before 3 p.m.	You lock yourself in your bedroom/bathroom for at least 30 minutes	You run outside and blurt out a string of obscenities
Your child says “This is stupid”	You tell your spouse you are “going for a walk” with a “friend” who doesn’t actually exist	You quietly complete an assignment for your child just to get it done	You text another parent in your child’s class to ask if this is as frustrating for them as it is for you	Your child says “I don’t understand”
Your child can’t get his/her video feed to work	Your child can’t hear his teacher	Your child’s teacher “accidentally” disconnects from a live video feed	Your child is late for a live Zoom class	Your child’s teacher says, “I know this isn’t the same”
